La grande bellezza (2013)

Jep: Many people think that a funeral is a random event, with no rules. It's not. The funeral is the social event par excellence. Never forget that at a funeral, everything is staged.

It's nice, but I would also try the other one.

You patiently wait for the relatives to free themselves from the crowd and once you have made sure that the whole audience has sat down, only then can you offer condolences. In this way everyone can see you as you take the patient's hands, place your hands on their arm, whisper something in their ear, a sure phrase, spoken with authority, for example: "In the next few days, when you'll feel emptiness, know that you can always count on me." The audience will ask, "But what is Jep Gambardella saying?"

This is definitely the right dress.
